Canvas Stretching - What You Need to Know

If you are thinking about stretching your canvas, there are a few things that you need to know. For one thing, canvas stretching requires a particular skill set and great care. In Sydney, you can find the best canvas stretching services. Read on to learn more. Read about the different stretcher bars available: ASA, EasyWrappe, and Pre-notched. After reading this article, you'll be well on your way to getting the perfect canvas stretching Sydney.

ASA

One of the first steps in framing a piece of art on canvas is to have it stretched professionally. A professional framer can transform a blank canvas into an artwork by stretching it. Stretching a canvas is an excellent way to protect it from aging and bowing. Here are some things to look for when choosing a professional framer. All of these steps will ensure that your work of art will last for years to come.

The process of stretching a canvas includes preparing the piece and stapling the edges together. The canvas is stretched with stainless steel rust-free staples to the frame support. When stretching a painting on canvas, it is crucial to ensure that the artist intends to have the image wrapped around the canvas. As a rule, a stretcher-bar must be at least 3/4" deep, otherwise the finished product will be smaller than the original.

EasyWrappe

While many art stores have EasyWrappe bars, it is not as simple as this. To stretch your canvas print, you must first purchase pre-notched stretcher bars available in different woods. Pine is the most expensive type of wood, while fir is the least expensive. Using pre-notched stretcher bars will reduce fir wood's cost to $0.95 per linear foot. This method is better for higher-volume print studios.

The system works by printing your photo approximately 4" wider and 4" longer than the final frame size. Once you have the printed photo or image, simply peel, clip, and fold it. The EasyWrappe system includes four corner braces, archival glue, and 100 holding pins. You can also use your own frame. This method will cost approximately 60% less than outsourcing. EasyWrappe canvas stretching Sydney is an affordable alternative to professional framing.

Pre-notched stretcher bars

If you want to save money on your canvas stretching Sydney services, consider purchasing pre-notched stretcher bars. They are available in various wood species, from pine to fir. Pine wood is the most expensive while fir is the least expensive. For this reason, it is a good idea to research the cost of pre-notched bars in Sydney before making your final decision. Here are some benefits of pre-notched bars:

These bars are available in different depths. Pre-notched bars are available in two-inch increments up to 40 inches, while deeper bars come in ten-cm increments and can be as much as 200 cm long. They are a good choice for stretching a wide variety of paintings and other art pieces. They can be bought at any local art store. You can also use your own stretcher bars if you are a beginner.

Professional framers

Canvas stretching is an art form that a professional framer should only attempt. It involves stretching the canvas over a frame with stretcher bars, securing the image, and stretching it over the edges of the frame. Using professional equipment, a canvas stretching framer can achieve a perfect, professional result every time. So whether you're looking for a contemporary or classic look, professional stretching framers in Sydney can help you create the perfect canvas frame.

Various types of frames are available. The most common frames are float and L-shaped, which give an "L" shape to the piece of art. These frames also have no lip to cover the edge of the canvas, giving it the appearance of floating on the wall. Framers in Sydney use these frames to create a sleek, modern look for canvas paintings. In general, float frames are more expensive than standard ones, but they are ideal for some artwork.

Cost

Outsourcing your canvas stretching requires a certain amount of knowledge, skill, and equipment. While many professional framers charge between $75 and $125 per linear foot of canvas, you can do it yourself for a fraction of the cost. In addition, you will be in control of the stretching process, reducing the prices even more. If you are unsure whether you should outsource your stretching, read on to discover the different options available.

Depending on the type of frame you want, you can expect to pay anywhere from $50 to $270 for your canvas stretching. The final cost will depend on the size of the canvas, the frame type, and the amount of protection you want your canvas to receive. Most framers will offer a free estimate. While the cost of canvas stretching Sydney will vary, it is worth contacting at least three companies before making a final decision.